To Randolph-Macon College:

It is without reservation that I recommend Dr. Amber Peacock for tenure-track at Randolph-Macon College. As a graduate of Randolph-Macon College's Education Department, I know she is an incredible asset to the school.

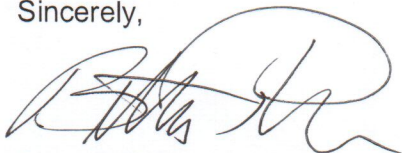

While I was enrolled at Randolph-Macon and taking courses in Education, I worked closely with Dr. Peacock. To say that she prepared me for my career in Education would be an understatement. As an English teacher at Northeastern High School, I daily apply skills I was taught by Dr. Peacock and reflect on the quality education she helped provide me. She never hesitated to go above and beyond to help any of the secondary education students in our program. The pedagogy I acquired is a direct result of the time, dedication, and passion she commits her students.

The research she conducted this summer is also more than beneficial to the Education program. As a member of the Randolph-Macon College Education Alumni Board, I have seen first hand the effect of Dr. Peacock's work. The program is now making valuable changes that will affect students in a positive way during their fieldwork experiences as a result of her research. Dr. Peacock is always striving to help the school become that much better.

I cannot fathom a professor more deserving of tenure-track than Dr. Peacock. She reflects the mission statement of Randolph-Macon College and taught me to do the same. As a teacher, I communicate effectively with my colleagues, students, and parents. Not only did I learn to think analytically, but I was taught how to teach my students to think analytically. Dr. Peacock also taught me to appreciate the creative process by differentiating to meet my needs. Her caring disposition is one that should make the Randolph-Macon community proud.

I value the relationship I was able to build with Dr. Peacock during my time at Randolph-Macon and I know that she works incredibly hard in every aspect of what she does and would make the college community proud.

Sincerely,

Bethany Phares
